THE LURE OF THE Ranch Country

The "Dude Ranch" vacation, annually becoming more popular, is as much a part of Americana as the Pony Express and Wells Fargo. Shortly after the turn of the century, some of the ranches in the Union Pacific West began accepting "paying guests" during the summer months. These "guests" in many instances, were people whose nerves had frayed and grown weary of the bustle and din of city life, and who, through mutual friends, arranged to take advantage of the delightful informality of ranch life, and the dry, clear, exhilarating air of the western country. Out of these beginnings have evolved the dude ranches of today, where the visitor is still a guest in the home of the rancher. For this reason, most ranchers insist on exchanging references with prospective patrons.

Practically every section of the West has its quota of these dude ranches offering all degrees of comfort and accommodations. Some have elaborate modern facilities, while others offer a more-or-less "rough and ready" ranch life.

Visitors or guests at these ranches are affectionately referred to as "dudes," hence "dude ranch" — a ranch where "dudes" are entertained. Many eastern families have for years been spending their vacations at these ranches, as they prefer this type of vacation to all others.

Each ranch has its "brand" which is a letter, insignia, or often the initials of the owner. It is a mark which is "branded" or burned into the hides of all the stock on the ranch for the purpose of identification. Many of the individual ranch brands are shown in this book.

A dude ranch is an ideal place to make new and congenial friends, for, as was stated before, most ranchers exchange references and will take in only folks of good character who get along well with others.

What to Expect

No two ranches are alike. Some are large "operating" ranches where cattle are "run" and ranching is carried on the year 'round regardless of guests. Another type is especially planned for visitors during the summer. Still another is the mountain "lodge" or "resort" where perhaps fishing might be featured.

Practically all ranches charge by the week, which charge includes your cabin or room accommodations, your meals, saddle horse (in some cases quoted extra) and all the numerous services which the ranch furnishes in order to make your stay both comfortable and interesting. It is, in fact, an "all-expense" proposition and should be considered in that light.

A dude ranch vacation usually includes a lot of horseback riding along scenic mountain trails, and in addition fishing, swimming, dancing, picnicking, moonlight rides to steak fries and wiener roasts, chuck-wagon dinners, and in general entering into the life of a real western cattle ranch. For the elderly or the not-so-ambitious type, most ranches have inviting lounges with library, radio, (television in some areas), and broad, sun-swept verandas for just "taking it easy." Some ranches arrange automobile sight-seeing trips to near-by spots of scenic interest, Indian reservations, or rodeos held round-about.

The food served on a western dude ranch is plain, well-cooked and in ample portions. It cannot be likened to a hotel or summer resort in this respect for western appetites call for something quite substantial. Guests are usually served "family" style. The ranch truck garden provides fresh vegetables for the table and the dairy herd furnishes an abundance of rich milk. Some ranches supply their own beef. After a day in the open you'll find yourself "stowing away" this wholesome ranch food like one of the regular "hands."

In the evening there is likely to be informal entertainment, card games, singing and dancing in the central lodge. On many ranches, Saturday night is the night to go to the neighboring town for the barn dance, and visit with wranglers and guests from other ranches.

What to Wear

Felt hats, wool shirts, khaki trousers, riding breeches or heavy slacks and stout walking shoes are about right for ranch life. The popular "Levis" (overall pants) and western boots, as well as more elaborate western costume clothes, may be purchased at many ranches or in western towns. Keep in mind cold nights, warm mid-day sun, possible rain and snow in high altitudes, and outfit accordingly. But don't let your wardrobe bother you too much! Just keep it simple and western.

Taking the Children

Growing children thrive on the carefree, outdoor life; the delicious, well-cooked food, topped off with all the rich milk they can drink. It gives them new zest and keenness, too, so, by all means, take 'em along! Some ranches make special family rates.

Hunting and Fishing

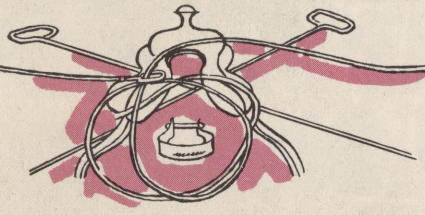
Practically all ranches offer excellent fishing near by, or pack trips to more remote lakes and streams, if you wish. Big game hunting in season is also featured by many ranches, some even going so far as to guarantee "the bag."

Reservations

It is advisable that you write to the ranch well in advance of your arrival to make definite reservations. When you write ask for literature as most ranch owners issue folders which contain illustrations and general information about their ranch which will assist you in reaching a decision.

Responsibility

Union Pacific believes to be reliable the statements regarding various ranches printed in this book, and they have been verified as much as possible. However, it cannot guarantee them as it has no part in the management of the ranches. Persons interested should correspond, in advance, with the ranch management who are glad to give references.



This is the brand of the Dude Ranchers' Association, address Box 1363, Billings, Montana. It appears in this booklet opposite the name of each ranch which is a member of that association.

This is the brand of the Colorado Dude and Guest Ranch Association, 225 West Colfax St., Denver 2, and indicates, where it appears in the body of this book, ranch members of that association.

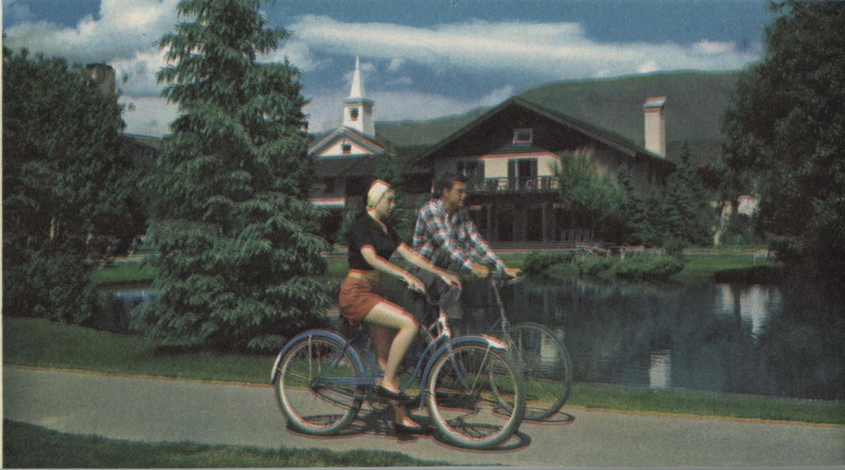
SUN VALLEY, IDAHO

Tucked away in a pocket of the Sawtooth Mountains in central Idaho lies famous Sun Valley, America's foremost year 'round sports resort.

Sun Valley has been described as "like a Seaside Ranch in the Mountains." But it's more than that! It offers just about everything for the "perfect" vacation. Imagine skating on an outdoor ice rink in July . . . swimming in one of the two glass-enclosed, outdoor pools . . . golfing on a perfect course, or enjoying one of the dozens of other sports that only Sun Valley offers.



You can select your mount from a fine string of saddle horses to explore the hills 'round about, or, with experienced guide, take off for more distant mountain trails. There's fine trout fishing close by, or you can rent a "drive yourself" car and take an all-day or longer fishing trip into the mountain fastness to the north.

Then there's skeet and trap shooting, tennis, boating, croquet, bicycling, as well as various indoor recreation facilities. At night there is music and dancing in the hotels, and current feature movies at the Sun Valley Opera House.

During the winter, of course, Sun Valley offers the world's finest skiing and winter facilities.

For information, write Mr. Winston McCrea, manager, Sun Valley, Idaho, or consult any Union Pacific representative at offices listed on page 56 of this book.

Nevada and California Ranches

Many vacationers to the Union Pacific West like to take advantage of the opportunity to enjoy the wide pleasure variety offered by both of these neighboring states. Well known for its liberal laws and customs, Nevada, in some aspects, has retained more of the exciting frontier customs than some of the other western states. Mountains, deserts, modern cities, "ghost towns," all serve to make it a state of varied contrasts. Las Vegas is Nevada's principal rail gateway on Union Pacific. California offers so much to see and do, you may wish to combine a visit to one of its fine dude ranches with a tour of its cosmopolitan cities or vast national parks. California ranches offer a wealth of entertainment and healthful, outdoor living in a variety of desert, mountain and sea settings. May we suggest for the finest in transportation to Nevada and to Southern California, ride the Streamliners "City of Los Angeles" or "City of St. Louis," or the "Challenger Streamliner." All operate daily, and are outstanding trains that will add much to your vacation enjoyment.
